

A staggering 182 million people in sub-Saharan Africa alone could die of disease directly attributable to climate change by the end of the century. Many millions more throughout the world face death and devastation, due to climate-induced floods, famine, drought and conflict. It's time to change the climate

Climate change and our partners

Front: During the rainy season, the current erodes the banks of the river Padma. This turns hundreds of families into environmental refugees
Christian Aid/Amanda Farrant

Back: Deforestation in Ethiopia has caused soil erosion and reduced rainfall. Christian Aid partner Action for Development is working to counter these effects by planting tree nurseries
